"Creativity is a positive and nourishing urge of my mind, body, and soul. At times expressing and releasing this creativity feels more vital to me than even eating and drinking. Certain images and ideas haunt me until I get them out of my head, I call them demons, and I obsess over them until I exorcise them if you will. Photography and poetry are my two main instruments of exorcism. I feel strongly that art should not merely be for or about the artist. Why I write a poem or take a certain photograph is not as important as the thought, vision, emotion, or memory it evokes or stirs within you the observer."-
Bryan Warsaw

"From my first memories, I've been using my imagination, capturing lost goodies in the yard, creating collections of small pieces of paper and nothings, and taking pictures. My first camera was a wooden toy made by my grandfather and still sits on my desk. As my love for art grew, I was always encouraged to think creatively, to look for answers and meaning beyond what my eyes could see. I didn't realize it then, but noticing small details inspired me to capture beauty in a way that could bring joy to others. I feel that maybe if we all looked closer at the things we see all the time, the minutia of life, we'd appreciate the gifts we've been given."- Annette Warsaw
