Jai Sen -based in New Delhi, India, and in Ottawa, Canada - is an architect by training and first practice, then an activist around the rights of the labouring poor based in Kolkata, India, and now a student of the history and dynamics of movement. Seeing critical reflection as a potent contribution to building transformative power, his present work is around creating spaces for reflection in and on movement, in different media. Author/editor/co-editor of several books and articles on the dynamics and globalisation of movement, he is Director at CACIM (Critical Action : Centre in Movement) and Co-Coordinator at OpenWord.

This talk is part of The Nongovernmental Impulse Symposium, 19-20 April. For more information, see thenongovernmentalimpulse.weebly.com.
