

Which desires are articulated most frequently?
Which desires are articulated least frequently?
Are there desires that are equivalent though formulated differently?
Under what conditions?
Are there desires that are not equivalent though formulated identically?
Under what conditions?
In what context did the formulator imagine the fulfillment of a desire?
In how many contexts could the desire be fulfilled?
What desires could be transformed into fulfillment by selecting from existing alternatives?
What desires would require for their fulfillment the creation of new alternatives?

So I end with what for me will be the beginning designing a new society. (I am fed up with only being designed by this society; I am intelligently and emotionally tired of its economics designing my work, of its regurgitated press quotes designing my conversations, of its consumer behavior designing the maze my free time can, for a while, avoid but not escape.) Finally, I want to say that if anyone asks the perennial question, "And who then will pick up the garbage?" -- I have an answer: Nobody. A conveyor belt.

your impatient,
Mark Sullivan

Dear Barry Clemens,
I heard in the description SBIP has to distinguish and report. In trying to SBIP might do this, I am are the linguistic structural signal that an input is. What are the linguistic conceal an argument?"

while X, Y.

X, but Y.

either X, or Y.

if X, then Y.

X; therefore Y.

X; consequently Y.

X, so that Y.

since X, Y.

X, even though Y.

inspite of X, Y.

X, for Y.